

Georgia power distribution box explosion

Overview

ATLANTA — Georgia Power is making final repairs following an underground fire in midtown Atlanta that left thousands without power for several hours. The fire began more than 20 hours ago due to an equipment failure related to a distribution line in an underground vault, as reported. Starting in June, a decrease of around $50 per year for the typical residential customer is part of approximately $285 million in yearly savings statewide. See how we're lowering rates and keeping your bills predictable. With so much of your energy going toward staying comfortable in your home. We CANNOT repair or restore power to homes with damaged service entrances. If your service entrance is damaged during a major storm, you may be eligible for up to $450 in reimbursement to help offset repair costs.
